

Record in the Commens Bibliography. Retrieved from http://www.commens.org/bibliography/journal\_article/rydenfelt-henrik-2015-emotional-interpretants-and-ethical-inquiry, 11.01.2026.

---

Type: Article in Journal

Author: Rydenfelt, Henrik

Title: Emotional interpretants and ethical inquiry

Year: 2015

Journal: Sign Systems Studies

Volume: 43

Issue: 4

Pages: 501-513

Keywords: Emotional Interpretant, Ethics

Abstract: The connection between emotions and ethical views or ethical inquiry has been considered intimate by a number of philosophers. Based on Peirce's discussion on the emotional interpretants in MS 318, I will suggest that such interpretants could be exploited in ethical inquiry. I will first argue, drawing on T. L. Short's interpretation of Peirce, that there are final emotional interpretants, and such emotional interpretants actually formed (or dynamical) can be more or less appropriate concerning the sign's (dynamical) objects. I will then explore the prospect that emotional interpretants could be harnessed for the particular cognitive purpose of ethical inquiry, concluding that normative judgments based on feelings could serve as its observational part.

ISSN: 14064243

DOI: 10.12697/SSS.2015.43.4.08

Language: English