Abstract / From the Robin Catalogue:

Description: A. MS., G-1905-1b, pp. 1-26, 30-63 (with no break in text); 12-28, 20-21, 27-28, 45-59; plus 9 single page variants.

Published, in part, as 5.402n (pp. 33-37). Unpublished is the mention of an early anticipation of pragmatism in a Journal of Speculative Philosophy article of 1868 (G-1868-2). In that article CSP accepts two positions which underlie pragmatism: Critical Common-sensism and Scholastic realism. Critical Common-sensism differs from the Scottish notions of common sense. Two classes of indubitable propositions noted. Acritical inferences and reasoning. Logica docens and logica utens. CSP finds support of Critical Common-sensism in the writings of Avicenna. Several applications of pragmatism to the meaning of matter and time and to the notion of action at a distance. Theory of signs, especially symbols.
