Term: Subject
Quote: Because every speech must contain two elements: one indicative, the other symbolic, there is a logical foundation for the separation of a proposition into a subject and a predicate. The subject is the part containing the indicative constituent, and from which it cannot conveniently be detached, while the predicate is the part purely symbolic.
References: MS [R] 409:96
Date of Quote: 1893-1895 [c.]