Dicisign

"..there are signs that both can be and have to be interpreted in an appropriate act and deed, in order that their peculiar purport may be conveyed. Let a man write his name on a scrap of paper, and it means nothing; but let him affix it to a legal instrument or affidavit, and it asserts. Such an assertive sign is technically named a dicisign."

References: MS [R] 1476:6
Date of Quote: 1904 [c.]
URL: http://www.commens.org/dictionary/entry/quote-draft-nichols-review-c-9