Argument

A sign is also intended to determine, in a mind or elsewhere, a sign of the same object; and this interpretant of the sign may be the very sign itself; but as a general rule it will be different. It is a perfection in a sign separately to signify its intended interpretant. If it does this, it becomes and argumention or argument. (Some pedants insist on the former word; but the very best usage supports the latter.)

References: MS [R] 9:1-2
Date of Quote: 1904
URL: http://www.commens.org/dictionary/entry/quote-foundations-mathematics-r-3