Term: Character
Quote: The possibility of any definite predicate being true is the being of a corresponding character. That is the signification of the logical term “character.” A character belongs to whatever singulars the corresponding predicate could truly be asserted of; and a character which belongs to anything existent is thereby said itself to exist, and to exist in the singulars of which the predicate is true.

References: MS [R] 200:111
Date of Quote: 1907
URL: http://www.commens.org/dictionary/entry/quote-fourth-curiosity-21