Firstness

We have seen that it is the immediate consciousness that is preeminently first, the external dead thing that is preeminently second. In like manner, it is evidently the representation mediating between these two that is preéminently third. Other examples, however, should not be neglected. The first is agent, the second patient, the third is the action by which the former influences the latter. Between the beginning as first, and the end as last, comes the process which leads from first to last.

References: EP 1:250; CP 1.361

Date of Quote: 1887-1888

URL: http://www.commens.org/dictionary/entry/quote-guess-riddle-0