Sign

A sign mediates between the interpretant sign and its object. Taking sign in its broadest sense, its interpretant is not necessarily a sign. [...] A sign [...] is an object which is in relation to its object on the one hand and to an interpretant on the other in such a way as to bring the interpretant into a relation to the object corresponding to its own relation to the object. I might say ‘similar to its own’ for a correspondence consists in a similarity; but perhaps correspondence is narrower.

References: SS 31-2; CP 8.332

Date of Quote: 1904.10.12

URL: http://www.commens.org/dictionary/entry/quote-letters-lady-welby-47