Term: Existence
Quote: That mode of being which we call existence, the reaction of everything in the universe against every other, the crowding out of a place for itself, acting most on things near, less on things far, but brutally insisting on a place is Secundan. I say “brutally”, because no law, so far as we know, makes any single object to exist. Law only determines in what way things shall behave, once they do exist.
References: MS [R] L67
Date of Quote: 1905
Editorial Annotations: This passage has been obtained from the transcription provided by the Peirce Study Group at the University of Navarra
URL: http://www.commens.org/dictionary/entry/quote-letters-mario-calderoni-3