Arguments are of three kinds, Deduction, Induction, and what I call Abduction. […] If the facts directly asserted in the argument compell or tend to compell the fact asserted in the conclusion, so that the inference takes place by force, the argument is Deductive.